My report on the attendance of museums and galleries in England.

Museums and galleries are ~~in my opinion~~ playing a very important role in today's society. These buildings hold a lot of priceless historical items, that should draw on some attention from the public. ~~(When a person enters a museum, he doesn't understand what's so special about it. But when a person comes out, he's becoming a fan of museums. You could say the same about galleries.)~~ But how many people actually visit these buildings? And ^{what} dynamic ^{changes} can we see during the report? By collecting some data for three separate years: 2013, 2015, 2017, - we'll learn about the rate of visits to national museums and galleries in England.

For my report I chose five buildings: The British Museum, The National Gallery, Tate Gallery, Natural History museum and Science Museum respectively. The statistics show that museums and galleries attendance is pretty high. ~~millions of people want to see treasures and items that existed in the past.~~ But there are some interesting things I noticed during the analysis.

First of all, while The British Museum, The National Gallery and Tate Gallery had a huge increase in attendance, The Natural History Museum and Science Museum had a big decrease in numbers. The reason for that is the introduction of admission charges in 2014. Then second of all, From 2013 to 2017 The British Museum went from fourth place On the comparison to other museums and galleries visit numbers to first.

To increase the appeal of Natural History Museum and Science Museum, they need to get rid of admission charges. Also, the board of directors should look into the idea of public events - They are ~~(pretty)~~ substantial for that goal.

All in all, I think that in twenty years from now, museums and galleries will get a huge popularity boost.
