Attendance of museums and galleries.

The purpose of my report is to summarize the data on visits to national museums and galleries in England, to make comparisons and to give recommendations to the museum boards of directors. 32

Summarizing the data, I can say that national museums and galleries given in the charts were visited by approximately 16.1 million people in 2014. The most popular museums and galleries in England were British Museum, the National Gallery and Tate Gallery with 5.6, 4.8 and 2.2 million visitors respectively. The Natural History Museum was visited by 1.9 million people and the Science Museum was visited by only 1.6 million. 108

Comparing the charts for 2013 and 2014, some substantial changes can be seen. In 2013, the most attended museums were the Natural History Museum and the Science Museum. However, after these museums introduced admission charges in 2014, their attendance rate dropped significantly. And so the British Museum took the lead in 2014, despite having only 2.6 million visitors in 2013, with 5.1 million visitors. 108

In my opinion, to change the current situation, museums should consider admission charges, as they clearly do not appeal to the visitors. Furthermore, the museums should advertise themselves more, as there is still a lot of potential visitors for them in England. 108

To summarize, it is clear that the number of people visiting museums and galleries is growing, which is a good sign, as more people are becoming interested in history and culture. 239 words
