Introduction

The purpose of this report is to summarize the data on the attendance of some of the most popular English museums and galleries, and give ~~the~~ recommendations how to increase the attendance.

Summarizing

Every museum and gallery has people, who it appeals to. The British Museum was visited almost by six million people in 2017. The National Gallery, which is the most famous gallery in UK, was visited by about five million people in 2017. The Natural History and Science Museums and the Tate & Gallery had about two million visitors in 2017. These rating were rather different in 2013. The Natural History and Science Museums had about four million visitors, and the British Museum and National Gallery were visited by almost three million. Tate Gallery had only one million visitors in 2013.

Differences

The museums and galleries attendance rating has changed dramatically for the five years. Although the British Museum was the most popular in 2017, it took only fourth place of these five museums in 2013. The attendance of science museums has been halved, while cultural ones ^{have} gained their popularity. This might have happened for several reasons. First of all, the Natural History and Science Museums introduced admission charges in 2014, so their rates has been rather low in 2015 and in 2017. Secondly, people might have become more interested in culture than in science and a great number of audience of science museums ~~has~~ has begun to go to culture museums.

Conclusion

All in all, the British museum ^{has} stayed the most popular three years, and all the museums are gaining their popularity gradually. To increase the popularity, science museums should draw on the admission charges and ~~to~~ to teach people to ~~behave~~ behave respectively towards science, because it is substantial now and they put art ^{and culture} above it. Culture museum should make more exhibitions to attract new audience.
